Rer. B. A. McGuire was sworn, and testified that he knew the parties, Mr. Tillottson Brown and wife, and had been to the house frequently on 5th street. Mrs. Brown placed herself under the pastoral charge of the witness, as he thinks, in '59, about six months before the marriage, and on the 10th of November, 1859, he married them. Witness always saw Mr. Brown treat Emily Wiley as his wife.

Witness was called to preside at Mrs. Brown's accouchement, which took place in the latter part of March, 1834, when a female child was delivered, and he saw this child often afterwards, and has heard her called Emily. DAN RICE'S GREAT SHOW .- The crowds moved towards the great show yesterday in regiments, like brigades going to the front. Before the performances commenced last night the ticket office and doors were closed, and hundreds of anxious visitors were compelled to return home disappointed. We have heard the audience inside variously estimated at from 4,000 to 5, 00, and when we reflect that the enormous tent was literally packed with human beings from the ring to the outer cir-cumference, we are inclined to think the latter figures nearest correct. There was a large crowd also in the afternoon, but not so overwhelming as at night-and this admonishes us to suggest to families who have a natural curiosty to hear and see the Great Jester, to go in the afternoon, (they show every afternoon and night this week) or, if at night, to start early. To run the gauntlet of the jam around the ticket office and doors is something of a task, but the disappointment of going there and find-ing the pavilion full and no more admitted, is still worse.

Notwithstanding the pressure last night, the immense throng abandoned themselves to enjoyment, and the iamous humorist fairly revelled in bon mots. Dan Rice is not a clown in the common acceptation of the word-rather a lecturer or commentator upon the times and subjects that appear to be suggested by the occasion. He "points a moral or adorns a tale" with a joke, and sugar-coats a precept with a wittleism. So much has been said and heard about Mrs. Dan Rice, that of course everybody was on the qui vire for her appearance. The lady spectators even acknowledged that she was young, pretty, and modest. The gentle-men pronounced her charming, graceful, and courageous. Her quiet and unassuming style disarmed the criticisms of her own sex. while her beautiful form and features, with just dash enough for a well bred lady, when the movements of her horse gave occasion, completely captivated the gentlemen. The romantic mar-ringe was a general subject of newspaper remark, when it occurred, three years ago, and to transfer Mrs. Rice to the publicity of the ring of a show, we thought rather questions. ble, until we saw how entirely she is the lady even on horseback, and before a miscellaneous The whole entertainment passed off with great ecint.
